TELEPRONE No. 12.

Hongkong, January 14th, 1889. FROM the telegrams brought on by the Australian mail we learn that the Manchester Chamber of Commerce has carried by a large majority resolutions favouring a policy of what is termed fair trade. It is proposed that import duties should be levied on foreigngoodsequivalent to the estimated amount of rates and taxes incurred in the production of similar goods in Great Britain. The Economist characterises the arguments advanced in support of the proposition as illogical and ineffective, and says that if the by placing an export duty on raw cotton and an import duty on manufactures. The proposition of the Manchester Chamber differs. in some degree from the " fair trade" doctrine. The fair traders propose to levy taxes owners' ideas are rather higher than charterers' on goods from countries which impose would accord the like privilege to British goods. The new Manchester school do not avowedly propose retaliation or protection. but claim that foreign goods entering the country should contribute to the revenue same proportion as British goods. This very ingenious presentment of masked protection was first made, if our recollection serves us wright, at a meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute held some eighteen months or two years ago. A calculation was entered into to show what proportion . of the cost of manufactured iron and steel must be set down to taxation in the shape of rates on premises, etc., and it was contended that foreign manufactures should contribute in the same proportion. This proposal was modestly advanced on what were represented as equitable grounds and not as in any way striking at the fundamental principle of free When, however, its wrappings of verbiage are torn away the proposal resolves of unanimous that the peace of Europe is assured itself into protection pure and simple. What is simed at is the crippling of foreign competitors in the home markets by making them pay two sets of taxes instead of one. Home manufacturers have to pay rates for police protection, for the maintenance of roads, and for the purposes of government generally. Foreign manufacturers contribute nothing to these purposes in Great Britain, but they have to pay equivalent taxes in their own countries. 'As they receive no protection or facilities from the British Government up to the time of the arrival of their goods in British ports payment of British taxes cannot be demanded from them on the ground of services rendered. Any proposal to tax imports, for other than revenue purposes, necessarily resolves itself into protection pure and simple. That Manchester should have been so far led away from true commercial principles as to pass such a resolution as that referred to in the Aus- four for 86. Then Rochfort found a spot and, 11th instant. tralian telegrams is indeed surprising. It was by the persistent efforts of Manchester that the import duties on cotton manufactures in India were abolished, and now Manchester proposes that England should adopt the very principle she condemns in others. There is still a strong feeling in India in favour of import duties, and if the new Manchester view prevailed in England India could not be denied the right to act upon it also, and a formidable barrier to British trade would be set up. But spart from any question of retaliation by India or any other country the proposal is thoroughly bad. Its intention is to keep out foreign goods. A country that will not buy cannot expect to sell, and seeing that England exists almost entirely by her trade, the food supplies of her own production not being sufficient for her population, to set up a tificial barriers to trade would be suicidal. If manufacturers have any right to protection, called by any name whatsoever, agriculturiets have

On the 8th November the agreement between the Masters' Association and the miners' delegates was flually accepted and signed; but, owing to diffaulties cropping up at one or two of the mines, which had to be adjusted on a broad basis, work was not resumed throughout the entire district until the 23rd November. We deeply regret the detention to vessels and the consequent very serious loss to shipowners on account of their vassels lying idle so long in our port. At the close of the strike the shipping in port represented over 100,000 tons register, and the less to shipowners and to our district generally cannot be estimated at less than half a million sterling.
